Oversight Reviews of DHS Immigration Enforcement Programs and Operations

The mission of the Department of Homeland Security Office of Inspector General (DHS OIG) is to provide objective, independent oversight of DHS programs and operations and to promote excellence, integrity, and accountability within DHS. Through our oversight, we help improve DHS's performance, as well as strengthen the public's trust.

Our current body of work, informed by a risk-based approach, includes several reviews<sup>1</sup> related to immigration enforcement, which are listed below. We recognize the importance of these reviews to provide valuable insight to DHS leadership and Congress, as well as to the public. These reviews are being conducted as expeditiously as possible while ensuring we apply rigor and uphold our professional standards.

The timeline for completing any oversight review is affected by several variables—including the scope and complexity of the project, access to information, and resource availability—therefore we cannot provide a specific date of completion. If, however, during our work we find matters that warrant immediate attention and action (such as those posing serious risk or imminent threat to safety, health, property, or continuity of operations), DHS OIG has mechanisms to promptly inform the Department and Congress, rather than waiting for a final report.

<sup>1</sup> Reviews include audits, inspections, and evaluations. These oversight projects are distinct from criminal investigations, the existence of which OIG does not publicly confirm or deny.
